The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. DOW, Burlington, Vt.

Letter from Central America.

[Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.]

GUATEMALA, C. A., Jan. 7.—When the archbishop, some renowned general or president of any of these republics die the remains are usually placed in some of the numerous catacombs under the cathedrals or in some vault above ground. Some they place in vaults, where they can be seen at the pleasure of those who have the key.

Those who cannot pay the very high price of a grave lot only rent a resting place for a few years, after which time, if the lease is not renewed, the remains are cast into some of the public cemeteries, or deep pits built near the poor people's grave yard. Here all lie in a confused heap, where the identity of the individual is lost forever. I have seen these receptacles above ground where all were exposed to the wind and weather. In parts of Central America these are called carneros, or flesh houses, from the fact that remains are often disinterred and cast in before decomposition is complete. Another strange disposition of remains is to cremate the dry bones and place the ashes in the house of the nearest relatives. Thus it is not uncommon for one traveling in any of the Spanish-American countries to be shown the box of dry bones of the father, wife, son, daughter or little babe who once belonged to the same family. Hence such expressions as "Bring papa's, mamma's, sister's or little brother's bones and show them to the gentleman," seems queer enough to us.

Once a year, on All Souls Day, the remains of noted dead, such as renowned priests, bishops, saints and martyrs are exposed to public view in the churches or cathedrals where the remains are laid to rest. On these occasions I have seen boxes, glass cases and coffins of dry and half decayed bones which have been exhibited for centuries on the same day. With these we see also the relics of the deceased. In one may be seen a cane or a prayer book; in another prayer-beads, a crucifix or perhaps a baby's shoe, a lock of hair or a little faded garment. On these days, which are set apart and sacredly devoted to the dead, the priests go and pray over the graves of the deceased. In the family circle the chair, plate and all are set for the absent one, the garments, playthings, or working tools are brought out as if to be used again by the departed, and, among the very superstitious, supper is set in a quiet room with all the deceased enjoyed eating in life.

Decoration Day is strictly kept and the duties to the dead are mournfully performed. On this day the graves are adorned with the fairest flowers. Sacred candles are kept burning as an emblem of light and purity in the world beyond, flowers are planted, trees are set out, leaning toms are straightened and hung with floral designs representing almost every sublime emotion that is prompted by faith in the life to come. In this country way death is made to lose its sting and the grave its victory.

RAMBLER.

THE WINTER OF 1876.—We make the following extracts from a weather record of 1876:

1876, January 8.—"Mr. B. A. Jacob told me to day that the buttercups were in bloom in Hollywood cemetery. Also, a tree of some kind. The unusually warm weather, and the long spell of it, is the topic of every ones conversation with his neighbors. There has not been a cold day since December 18th, when the thermometer at sunrise stood at 14°."

1876, January 12.—"We have had no snow since November 5th, and that did not cover the ground."

1876, January 14.—"The most pleasant winter so far that anybody can recollect. So much clear, dry weather."

1876, January 21.—"Mr. E. told me to-day that he had never before known so pleasant a winter. There has been no snow, and but little cold weather, and in fact scarcely any disagreeable weather."

What is your memory worth as to the weather?—Richmond Dispatch.
